

The AMERICAN --- --- INTEREST

Policy, Politics & Culture

VOL. XII, NO. 4 | MARCH/APRIL 2017

STRATEGIC CHOICES IN THE AGE OF TRUMP

THE ART OF THE DEAL: FIVE EASY PIECES

Philip Zelikow

TRUMP'S NEW WORLD ORDER

Niall Ferguson

SAME WORLD,
LONELY WORLD,
COLD WORLD

Adam Garfinkle

A Case of Schizophrenic Fear

As Inauguration Day approaches on Friday as I write, I sense that most Americans (and probably others) are resigned to the fact that Donald Trump is about to become President of the United States, and, cognitive dissonance being what it is, many have figured out ways to discount the potential downside of that onrushing reality. Fine; people do what they need to do. Some take comfort in the fact that several of Trump's cabinet choices are not as scary as he is, but what is anyone to make of the fact that the better choices flat out disagree with the President's own high-profile policy pronouncements? Some take comfort in assuming the strength of American's institutions, legal and otherwise, in preventing an unfit man from running the ship of state aground. Others just pray in very general terms.

But here's the problem for at least a few of us: If you know how cognitive dissonance works, then you become self-conscious of the much-historically-rehearsed process of delusional fear abatement—and then it no longer works. That's my problem: too much post-grad psych and history reading. Alas, truth does not always set you free; it's as likely to help deplete your single malt stock.

No matter how hard I try, I cannot make myself forget about the palliating blather so many American, British, and other intellectuals mouthed about Mussolini, Hitler, and Stalin in the interwar period—not that Donald Trump is a serious enough man to measure up potentially to quite that scale of evil. But the underlying similarity remains: Dishonest or simply mad speech is the smoke indicating the fire of dishonest and mad acts past and prospective.

So I am afraid, but my fear is oddly schizophrenic. On the one hand, I am afraid that Trump will blunder in ways that make the long-term damage to the reputation of American institutions already done by his mere election (remember Watergate?) much worse. He could further emaciate America's ever-anemic social idea, worsen class, racial, and ethnic tensions, inadvertently harm the economy, further derange a skittish international security environment, and even cause a major war. So when mentally surface-dwelling people, mostly Republicans, say they “want Trump to succeed” because a “failed presidency” is bad for the nation, I immediately think of Simone Weil's observation that “it is better to fail than to succeed in doing harm.”

On the other hand, there is plenty of low-hanging fruit that any non-Democratic Administration could have picked, some of which even a Hillary Clinton Administration might have picked. So many areas of American public policy are dysfunctional—some because of plutocratic abuses long plied by the elites of both major parties, others thanks to the legacy politically correct manias of market fundamentalists to the one side and progressive social authoritarian engineers to the other—that vast improvements can be had with relative ease now that one party controls the Oval Office and both houses of Congress. If Donald Trump et al. can reduce the extortionary tax burdens that middle-class Americans and small businesses suffer, radically simplify the rest of the tax code so as to force huge hordes of parasitic lawyers and accountants to get productive jobs, stop insulting the native intelligence and sentiments of less-than-college-educated people, and manage to avoid a nuclear war—whatever other nefarious things they do—they can probably get re-elected forever. And in a cold-blooded political way they would deserve to.

In short, I'm afraid that a Trump Administration might succeed well enough in some ways to fail disastrously in others. Now, where is that bottle? 🍷

CONTENTS

THE AMERICAN INTEREST • VOLUME XII, NUMBER 4, SPRING (MARCH/APRIL) 2017

RUSSIA

6 Trump's Russians

by James S. Henry

Did the near-criminal neglect of the mainstream media's investigative journalism obligation enable Americans to elect a very "well-connected" man as their 45th President?

28 Russia's Fascist Regime?

by Vladislav L. Inozemtsev

By standard scholarly definition, Russia today is not an illiberal democracy: It is an early-stage fascist state.

TRUMPIAN STRATEGY OPTIONS

36 Donald Trump's New World Order

by Niall Ferguson

It's wrong to depict President Trump's strategic choices as being either liberal internationalism or unilateralist neo-isolationism. There is a third, venerable tradition of strategic craftsmanship that may suit him well.

48 The Art of the Deal: Five Easy Pieces

by Philip Zelikow

If Donald Trump wants to practice the "art of the deal" as President in a turbulent world, he has options—if he is careful about how he pursues them.

62 Same World, Lonely World, Cold World

by Adam Garfinkle

The basic strategic direction of the Trump Administration, which still remains unknown, will establish a decisional architecture for every state in the international system, whether they like it or not.

POLICY SHOP

74 The National Security Act, Seventy Years On

by Richard K. Betts

Some observers blame poor decisional outcomes of recent years on U.S. government structure, but there's nothing wrong with the present set-up that a major reform will probably not make worse.

The
AMERICAN INTEREST

EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE

FRANCIS FUKUYAMA, chairman
CHARLES DAVIDSON, publisher & CEO
WALTER RUSSELL MEAD, editor-at-large
& director, The American Interest Online
JOSEF JOFFE

ADAM GARFINKLE, editor
DANIEL KENNELLY, senior managing editor
RACHEL HOSTYK, associate editor
DAMIR MARUSIC, associate publisher
RICHARD ALDOUS, contributing editor
R. JAY MAGILL, JR., illustrator
cover design by DAMIR MARUSIC
cover image, GETTY IMAGES

EDITORIAL BOARD

ANNE APPLEBAUM, PETER BERGER,
ZBIGNIEW BRZEZINSKI, ELIOT COHEN,
TYLER COWEN, ROBERT H. FRANK,
WILLIAM A. GALSTON, OWEN HARRIES,
G. JOHN IKENBERRY, STEPHEN D. KRASNER,
BERNARD-HENRI LÉVY, SEBASTIAN MALLABY,
MICHAEL MANDELBAUM, C. RAJA MOHAN,
ANA PALACIO, ITAMAR RABINOVICH,
LILIA SHEVTSOVA, HIRO AIDA,
MARIO VARGAS LLOSA, WANG JISI,
RUTH WEDGWOOD

ADVERTISING & SYNDICATION

DAMIR MARUSIC
damir.marusic@the-american-interest.com
(202) 223-4408

website

WWW.THE-AMERICAN-INTEREST.COM

SUBSCRIPTIONS: Call (800) 362-8433 or visit www.the-american-interest.com. One year (6 issues): $39 print; $19 online; $49 for both. Two years (12 issues): $69 print; $38 online; $98 for both. Please add $14 per year for print-subscription delivery to Canada and $33 per year for delivery to addresses outside the United States and Canada. Postmaster and subscribers, send subscription orders and changes of address to: The American Interest, P.O. Box 15115, North Hollywood, CA 91615. The American Interest (ISSN 1556-5777) is published six times a year by The American Interest LLC. Printed by Fry Communications, Inc. Postage paid in Mechanicsburg, Pennsylvania. ©2017, The American Interest LLC. Application for mailing at periodical pricing is pending in Washington, DC, and additional mailing offices. Editorial offices: 1730 Rhode Island Ave. NW, Suite 707, Washington, DC 20036. Tel.: (202) 223-4408. Fax: (202) 223-4489.

85 The Coming ISIS Diaspora and What to Do About It

by James Howcroft

More than 15 years and many intelligence community reforms after 9/11, we still do an inadequate job of sharing intelligence on terrorist threats within and among partner states. Here's how to do better.

90 Training Wreck

by Justin R. Reynolds

U.S. military assistance programs have their place, but they cannot do what Congress and others are asking them to do: Win wars.

100 Risk Cascades and How to Manage Them

by Seth D. Kaplan

The dangers posed by weak states are immense but conceptually misconstrued: The proper metric is not an isolated weak-state crisis but a risk cascade emanating from it.

REVIEWS

110 America's Village Atheists

by Crawford Gribben

At least as far as public discourse goes, American believers and atheists have historically been less opposites than twins: They put words in each others' mouths.

116 More Able Than Kane:
The Endless Genius of Orson Welles

by Colin Fleming

Yes, Citizen Kane is great, but that's not the half of it. The more Orson Welles was forced to improvise and budget down, the better he got.

120 Hollywood's Afghanistan

by Todd Greentree

Whiskey Tango Foxtrot is a lot better than one might have thought it could be, given its SNL-origin small-screen "signature." But war movies can only be as serious as the wars they depict, and as we Americans are about them.

125 I Should Have Talked to the Hand

by Carolyn Stewart

The plague of rudeness and insular, fact-free political condescension that social media has let loose in recent years, and that made Donald Trump's coarse reality-TV campaign rhetoric seem normal to so many people, was predicted by a prophet of sorts.

D. Trump

TRUMP

Did the near-criminal neglect of the mainstream media's investigative journalism obligation enable Americans to elect a very "well-connected" man as their 45th President?

Trump's Russians

James S. Henry

"Tell me who you walk with and I'll tell you who you are."

—Cervantes

"I've always been blessed with a kind of intuition about people that allows me to sense who the sleazy guys are, and I stay far away."

—Donald Trump, Surviving at the Top

Even before the November 8 election, many leading Democrats were vociferously demanding that the FBI disclose the fruits of its investigations into Putin-backed Russian hackers. Instead, FBI Director Comey decided to temporarily revive his zombie-like investigation of Hillary's emails. That decision may well have had an important impact on the James S. Henry is an investigative economist and lawyer who has written widely about offshore and onshore tax havens, kleptocracy, and pirate banking. He is the author of The Blood Bankers (Basic Books, 2003, 2005), an investigation of where the money went that was loaned to key debtor countries in the 1970s-1990s. He is a senior fellow at the Columbia University's Center on Sustainable Investment, a Global Justice Fellow at Yale, a senior advisor at the Tax Justice Network, and a member of the New York Bar.

election, but it did nothing to resolve the allegations about Putin. Even now, after the CIA has disclosed an abstract of its own still-secret investigation, it is fair to say that we still lack the cyberspace equivalent of a smoking gun.

Fortunately, however, for those of us who have been and remain curious about Trump's Russian connections, there is another readily accessible body of material that has so far received surprisingly little attention. This suggests that whatever the nature of President Donald Trump's relationship with President Putin, he has certainly managed to accumulate direct and indirect connections with a far-flung private Russian/former Soviet Union (FSU) network of outright mobsters, oligarchs, fraudsters, and kleptocrats.

Any one of these connections might have occurred at random. But the overall pattern is a veritable Star Wars bar scene of unsavory characters, with Donald Trump seated right in the middle. The analytical challenge is to map this network—a task that most journalists and law enforcement agencies, focused on individual cases, have failed to do.

Of course, to label this network "private" may be a stretch, given that in Putin's Russia even the toughest mobsters learn the hard way to maintain a respectful relationship with the “New Czar.” But here the central question pertains to our new Czar. Did the American people really know they were putting such a “well-connected” guy in the White House?

Kleptocracy and Capital Flight

A few of Donald Trump’s connections to oligarchs and assorted thugs have already received sporadic press attention—for example, former Trump campaign manager Paul Manafort’s reported relationship with exiled Ukrainian oligarch Dmytro Firtash. But before November 8 no one pulled the connections together, used them to identify still more relationships, or developed an image of the overall patterns.

Nor did anyone related these cases to one of the most central facts about modern Russia: its emergence since the 1990s as a world-class kleptocracy, second only to China as a source of illicit capital and criminal loot, with more than $1.3 trillion of net offshore “flight wealth” as of 2016.¹

This tidal wave of illicit capital is hardly just Putin’s doing. It is in fact a symptom of one of the most epic failures in modern political economy—one for which the West bears a great deal of responsibility. This is the failure, in the wake of the Soviet Union’s collapse in the late 1980s, to ensure that Russia acquired the kind of strong, middle-class-centric economic and political base that is required for democratic capitalism, the rule of law, and stable, peaceful relationships with its neighbors.

Instead, from 1992 to the Russian debt crisis of August 1998, the West in general—and the U.S. Treasury, USAID, the State Department, the IMF/World Bank, the EBRD, and many leading economists in particular—actively promoted and, indeed, helped to finance one of the most massive transfers of public wealth into private hands that the world has ever seen.

For example, Russia’s 1992 “voucher privatization” program permitted a tiny elite of former state-owned company managers and party apparatchiks to acquire control over a vast number of public enterprises, often with the help of outright mobsters. A majority of Gazprom, the state energy company that controlled a third of the world’s gas reserves, was sold for $230 million; Russia’s entire national electric grid was privatized for $630 million; ZiL, Russia’s largest auto company, went for about $4 million; ports, ships, oil, iron and steel, aluminum, much of the high-tech arms and airlines industries, the world’s largest diamond mines, and most of Russia’s banking system also went for a song.

From 1994 to 1996, under the infamous “loans-for-shares” program, Russia privatized 150 state-owned companies for just $12 billion, most of which was loaned to a handful of well-connected buyers by the state—and indirectly by the World Bank and the IMF. The principal beneficiaries of this “privatization”—actually, cartelization—were initially just 25 or so budding oligarchs with the insider connections to buy these properties and the muscle to hold onto them.² The happy few who made personal fortunes from this feeding frenzy—in a sense, the very first of the new kleptocrats—not only included numerous Russian officials, but also leading gringo investors/advisers, Harvard professors, USAID advisers, and bankers at Credit Suisse First Boston and other Wall Street investment banks. As the renowned development economist Alex Gerschenkron, an authority on Russian development, once said, “If we were in Vienna, we would have said, ‘We wish we could play it on the piano!’”

For the vast majority of ordinary Russian citizens, this extreme re-concentration of wealth coincided with nothing less than a full-scale 1930s-type depression. “Shock therapy” induced a rise in domestic price levels that wiped out the private savings of millions, bred rampant lawlessness, a public health crisis, and a sharp decline in life expectancy and birth rates.

Sadly, this forced neoliberal “market reform” policy package that was introduced between 1992 to late 1998 was not only condoned but partly designed and financed by senior Clinton Administration officials, neoliberal economists, and innumerable USAID, World Bank, and IMF officials. The few dissenting voices included some of the West’s best economic brains—Nobel laureates like James Tobin, Kenneth Arrow, Lawrence Klein, and Joseph Stiglitz. They also included Moscow University's Sergei Glaziev, who now serves as President Putin's chief economic adviser.³ Unfortunately, they were no match for the folks with the cash.

Or with the political chops. In January 1996 a secret team of professional U.S. political consultants arrived in Moscow to discover that, as CNN put it back then, "The only thing voters like less than Boris Yeltsin is the prospect of upheaval." The experts' solution was one of the earliest "our brand is crisis" campaign strategies, in which Yeltsin was "spun" as the only alternative to "chaos." To support him, in March 1996 the IMF also pitched in with $10.1 billion of new loans, on top of $17.3 billion of IMF/World Bank loans that had already been made.

With all this outside help, plus ample contributions from Russia's new elite, Yeltsin went from just 8 percent approval in the January 1996 polls to a 54-41 percent victory over the Communist Party candidate, Gennady Zyuganov, in the second round of the July 1996 election. At the time, mainstream media like Time and the New York Times were delighted. Very few outside Russia questioned the wisdom of this blatant intervention in post-Soviet Russia's first democratic election.

By the late 1990s the actual chaos that resulted from Yeltsin's warped policies had laid the foundations for a strong counterrevolution, including the rise of ex-KGB officer Putin and a massive outpouring of oligarchic capital that has continued up to the present. For ordinary Russians, as noted, this was disastrous. But for many banks, private bankers, hedge funds, law firms, and accounting firms, and for leading oil companies like ExxonMobil and BP, as well as for needy borrowers like the Trump Organization, the opportunity to feed on post-Soviet spoils was a godsend. This was vulture capitalism at its rawest.

The nine-lived Trump, in particular, had just suffered a string of six successive bankruptcies. So the massive illicit outflows that began in the mid-1990s from Russia and oil-rich FSU members like Kazakhstan and Azerbaijan provided precisely the kind of indiscriminating investors he needed. These outflows arrived at just the right time to fund several of Trump's post-2000 high-risk real estate and casino ventures—most of which failed. As Donald Trump, Jr., executive vice president of development and acquisitions for the Trump Organization, told the "Bridging U.S. and Emerging Markets Real Estate" conference in Manhattan in September 2008 (on the basis, he said, of his own "half-dozen trips to Russia in 18 months"):

[I]n terms of high-end product influx into the United States, Russians make up a pretty disproportionate cross-section of a lot of our assets; say in Dubai, and certainly with our project in SoHo and anywhere in New York. We see a lot of money pouring in from Russia.

All this helps to explain one of the most intriguing puzzles about Donald Trump's long, turbulent business career: how he managed to keep financing it, despite a dismal track record of failed projects.⁴ According to the "official story," this was due to a combination of brilliant deal-making, Trump's gold-plated brand, and raw animal spirits—with $916 million of creative tax-dodging added in as a kicker. But this official story is hokum. The truth is that, since the late 1990s, Trump was also greatly assisted by these abundant new sources of global finance, especially from "submerging markets" like Russia.

This suggests that neither Trump nor Putin is an "uncaused cause." They are not evil twins, exactly, but they are both byproducts of the same neoliberal policy scams that were peddled to Russia's struggling new democracy. One is the yin and the other is the yang of an episode in political economy derangement the last of which we may not see in our lifetimes.

A Guided Tour of Trump's Russian/FSU Connections

The following roundup of Trump's Russo-Soviet business connections is based on published sources, interviews with former law enforcement staff and other experts in the United States, the United Kingdom, and Iceland, searches of online corporate registries,⁵ and a detailed analysis of offshore company data from the Panama Papers.⁶ Given the sheer scope of Trump's activities, there are undoubtedly other worthy cases not mentioned here, but our interest is in overall patterns.

Note that none of the activities and business connections related below necessarily involved criminal conduct. While several key players do have criminal records, few of their prolific business dealings have been thoroughly investigated, and of course they all deserve the presumption of innocence. Furthermore, several of these players reside in countries where activities like bribery, tax dodging, and other forms of financial chicanery are either not illegal or are rarely prosecuted. As former British Chancellor of the Exchequer Denis Healey once said, the difference between "legal" and "illegal" is often just "the width of a prison wall."

So why collect and review material that either doesn't point to anything illegal or, in some cases, may be impossible to verify? Because when it comes to evaluating the probity of senior public officials, the public has the right to know about any material allegations—true, false, or, most commonly, unprovable—about their business partners and associates, so long as this information is clearly labeled as unverified.

Furthermore, the individual case-based approach to investigations employed by most investigative journalists and law enforcement agencies often misses the bigger picture: the global networks of influence and finance, licit and illicit, that exist among business people, investors, kleptocrats, organized criminals, and politicians, as well as the "enablers"—banks, accounting firms, law firms, and havens. Any particular component of these networks might easily disappear without making any difference. But the networks live on. It is these shadowy transnational networks that really deserve our scrutiny.

BAYROCK GROUP LLC— KAZAKHSTAN AND TEVFIK ARIF

We'll begin our tour of Trump's Russian/FSU connections with several business relationships that evolved out of the curious case of Bayrock Group LLC, a spectacularly unsuccessful New York real estate development company that surfaced in the early 2000s and, by 2014, had all but disappeared except for a few lawsuits. As of 2007, Bayrock and its partners reportedly had more than $2 billion of Trump-branded deals in the works. But most of these either never materialized or were miserable failures, for reasons that will soon become obvious.

Bayrock's "white elephants" included the 46-story Trump SoHo condo-hotel on Spring Street in New York City, for which the principle developer was a partnership formed by Bayrock and FL Group, an Icelandic investment company. Completed in 2010, the SoHo soon became the subject of prolonged civil litigation by disgruntled condo buyers. The building was foreclosed by creditors and resold in 2014 after more than $3 million of customer down payments had to be refunded. Similarly, Bayrock's Trump International Hotel & Tower in Fort Lauderdale was foreclosed and resold in 2012, while at least three other Trump-branded properties in the United States, plus many other "project concepts" that Bayrock had contemplated, from Istanbul and Kiev to Moscow and Warsaw, also never happened.

Carelessness about due diligence with respect to potential partners and associates is one of Donald Trump's more predictable qualities. Flying by the seat of the pants, he hooked up with Bayrock rather quickly in 2005, becoming an 18 percent minority equity partner in the Trump SoHo, and agreeing to license his brand and manage the building.⁷

Exhibit A in the panoply of former Trump business partners is Bayrock's former Chairman, Tefvik Arif (a.k.a. Arifov), an émigré from Kazakhstan who reportedly took up residence in Brooklyn in the 1990s. Trump also had extensive contacts with another key Bayrock Russian-American from Brooklyn, Felix Sater (a.k.a. Satter), discussed below.⁸ Trump has lately had some difficulty recalling very much about either Arif or Sater. But this is hardly surprising, given what we now know about them. Trump described his introduction to Bayrock in a 2013 deposition for a lawsuit that was brought by investors in the Fort Lauderdale project, one of Trump's first with Bayrock: "Well, we had a tenant in . . . Trump Tower called Bayrock, and Bayrock was interested in getting us into deals."⁹

According to several reports, Tefvik Arif was originally from Kazakhstan, a Soviet republic until 1992. Born in 1950, Arif worked for 17 years in the Soviet Ministry of Commerce and Trade, serving as Deputy Director of Hotel Management by the time of the Soviet Union's collapse.¹⁰ In the early 1990s he relocated to Turkey, where he reportedly helped to develop properties for the Rixos Hotel chain. Not long thereafter he relocated to Brooklyn, founded Bayrock, opened an office in the Trump Tower, and started to pursue projects with Trump and other investors.¹¹

Tevfik Arif was not Bayrock's only connection to Kazakhstan. A 2007 Bayrock investor presentation refers to Alexander Mashevich's "Eurasia Group" as a strategic partner for Bayrock's equity finance. Together with two other prominent Kazakh billionaires, Patokh Chodiev (a.k.a. "Shodiyev") and Alijan Ibragimov, Mashkevich reportedly ran the "Eurasian Natural Resources Cooperation." In Kazakhstan these three are sometimes referred to as "the Trio."¹²

The Trio has apparently worked together in metals and other natural resources ever since Gorbachev's late 1980s perestroika. It was during this period that they first acquired a significant degree of control over Kazakhstan's vast mineral and gas reserves. Naturally they found it useful to become friends with Nursultan Nazarbayev, Kazakhstan's long-time ruler. Indeed, State Department cables leaked by Wikileaks in November 2010 describe a close relationship between "the Trio" and the seemingly perpetual Nazarbayev kleptocracy.

In any case, the Trio has recently attracted the attention of many other investigators and news outlets, including the September 11 Commission Report, the Guardian, Forbes, and the Wall Street Journal. In addition to resource grabbing, the litany of the Trio's alleged activities include money laundering, bribery, and racketeering.¹³ In 2005, according to U.S. State Department cables released by Wikileaks, Chodiev (referred to in a State Department cable as "Fatokh Shodiyev") was recorded himself on video attending the birthday of reputed Uzbek mob boss Salim Abdvaliyeva and presenting him with a $10,000 "gift" or "tribute."

According to a 2015 article in the Belgian newspaper Le Soir, Chodiev and Mashkevich also became close associates of a curious Russian-Canadian businessman, Boris J. Birshtein, who happens to have been the father-in-law of another key Russian-Canadian business associate of Donald Trump in Toronto. We will return to Birshtein below.

The Trio also turn up in the April 2016 Panama Papers database as the apparent beneficial owners of a Cook Islands company, "International Financial Limited."¹⁴ The Belgian newspapers Het Laatste Nieuws, Le Soir, and La Libre Belgique have reported that Chodiev paid €23 million to obtain a "Class B" banking license for this same company, permitting it to make international currency trades. In the words of a leading Belgian financial regulator, quoted in La Libre in 2013, that would "make all money laundering undetectable."

The Panama Papers also indicate that some of Arif's connections at the Rixos Hotel Group may have ties to Kazakhstan. For example, one offshore company listed in the Panama Papers database, "Group Rixos Hotel," reportedly acts as an intermediary for four British Virgin Islands offshore companies.¹⁵ Rixos Hotel's CEO, Fettah Tamince, is listed as having been a shareholder of two of these companies, while a shareholder of another—"Hazara Asset Management"—had the same name as the son of a recent Kazakh Minister for Sports and Tourism. As of 2012, this Kazakh official was described as the third-most influential deputy in the country's Mazhilis (the lower house of Parliament), in a Forbes Kazakhstan article.

According to a 2015 lawsuit against Bayrock by Jody Kriss, one of its former employees, Bayrock started to receive millions of dollars in equity contributions in 2004, supposedly by way of Arif's brother in Russia, who allegedly "had access to cash accounts at a chromium refinery in Kazakhstan."

This as-yet-unproven allegation might well be just an attempt by the plaintiff to extract a more attractive settlement from Bayrock and its original principals. But it is also consistent with fact that chromium is indeed one of the Kazakh natural resources that is reportedly controlled by the Trio.

As for Arif, his most recent visible brush with the law came in 2010, when he and other members of Bayrock's Eurasian Trio were arrested together in Turkey during a police raid on a suspected prostitution ring, according to the Israeli daily Yediot Aharonot.

At the time, Turkish investigators reportedly asserted that Arif might be the head of a criminal organization that was trafficking in Russian and Ukrainian escorts, allegedly including some as young as 13.¹⁶ According to these assertions, big-ticket clients were making their selections by way of a modeling agency website, with Arif allegedly handling the logistics. Especially galling to Turkish authorities, the preferred venue was reportedly a yacht that had once belonged to the widely revered Turkish leader Atatürk. It was also alleged that Arif may have provided lodging for young women at Rixos Group hotels.¹⁷

According to Russian media, two senior Kazakh officials were also arrested during this incident, although the Turkish Foreign Ministry quickly dismissed this allegation as “groundless.” In the end, Turkish courts dismissed all the charges against Arif resulting from this incident in 2012, and his spokespeople have subsequently denied all involvement.

Finally, despite Bayrock’s nadir and these other legal entanglements, Arif has apparently remained active. For example, Bloomberg reports that, as of 2013, he, his son, and Rixos Hotels’ CEO Fettah Tamince had partnered to pursue the rather controversial business of advancing funds to cash-strapped high-profile soccer players in exchange for a share of their future marketing revenues and team transfer fees. In the case of Arif and his partners, this new-wave form of indentured servitude was reportedly implemented by way of a UK- and Malta-based hedge fund, Doyen Capital LLP. Because this practice is subject to innumerable potential abuses, including the possibility of subjecting athletes or clubs to undue pressure to sign over valuable rights and fees, UEFA, Europe’s governing soccer body, wants to ban it. But FIFA, the notorious global football regulator, has been customarily slow to act. To date, Doyen Capital LLP has reportedly taken financial gambles on several well-known players, including the Brazilian star Neymar.

THE CASE OF BAYROCK LLC— FELIX SATER

Our second exhibit is Felix Sater, the senior Bayrock executive introduced earlier.

This is the fellow who worked at Bayrock from 2002 to 2008 and negotiated several important deals with the Trump Organization and other investors. When Trump was asked in the 2013 deposition cited above who at Bayrock had brought him the Fort Lauderdale project, he replied: “It could have been Felix Sater, it could have been—I really don’t know who it might have been, but somebody from Bayrock.”¹⁸

Although Sater left Bayrock in 2008, by 2010 he was reportedly back in Trump Tower as a “senior advisor” to the Trump Organization—at least on his business card—with his own office in the building.

Sater has also testified under oath that he had escorted Donald Trump, Jr. and Ivanka Trump around Moscow in 2006, had met frequently with Trump over several years, and had once flown with him to Colorado. And although this might easily have been staged, he is also reported to have visited Trump Tower in July 2016 and made a personal $5,400 contribution to Trump’s campaign.

Whatever Felix Sater has been up to recently, the key point is that by 2002 at the latest, Tefvik Arif decided to hire him as Bayrock’s COO and managing director.¹⁹ This was despite the fact that by then Felix had already compiled an astonishing track record as a professional criminal, with multiple felony pleas and convictions, extensive connections to organized crime, and—the ultimate prize—a virtual “get out of jail free card,” based on an informant relationship with the FBI and the CIA that is vaguely reminiscent of Whitey Bulger.²⁰

Sater, a Brooklyn resident like Arif, was born in Russia in 1966. He reportedly emigrated with his family to the United States in the mid-1970s and settled in “Little Odessa.” It seems that his father, Mikhael Sheferovsky (a.k.a. Michael Sater), may have been engaged in Russian mob activity before he arrived in the United States. According to a certified U.S. Supreme Court petition, Felix Sater’s FBI handler stated that he “was well familiar with the crimes of Sater and [Sater’s] father, a [Semion] Mogilevich crime syndicate boss.”²¹ A 1998 FBI analysis reportedly said Mogilevich’s organization had “approximately 250 members,” and was involved in trafficking nuclear materials, weapons, and more, as well as money laundering. (See below.)

But Michael Sater may have been less ambitious than his son. His only reported U.S. criminal conviction came in 2000, when he pled guilty to two felony counts for extorting Brooklyn restaurants, grocery stores, and clinics. He was released with three years' probation. Interestingly, the U.S. Attorney for the Eastern District of New York who handled that case at the time was Loretta Lynch, who succeeded Eric Holder as U.S. Attorney General in 2014. Back in 2000, she was also overseeing the plea bargain of—and budding informant relationship with—Michael's son Felix, which may help to explain the father's sentence.

By then young Felix Sater was already well on his way to a career as a prototypical Russian-American mobster. In 1991 he stabbed a commodity trader in the face with a margarita glass stem in a Manhattan bar, severing a nerve. He was convicted of a felony and sent to prison. As Trump tells it, Sater simply "got into a barroom fight, which a lot of people do." The sentence for this felony conviction could not have been very long, because by 1993, 27-year-old Felix was already a trader in a brand-new Brooklyn-based commodity firm called "White Rock Partners," an innovative joint venture among four New York crime families and the Russian mob aimed at bringing state-of-the-art financial fraud to Wall Street.

Five years later, in 1998, Felix Sater pled guilty to stock racketeering, as one of 19 U.S.- and Russian mob-connected traders who participated in a $40 million "pump and dump" securities fraud scheme. Facing twenty years in Federal prison, Sater and Gennady Klotsman, a fellow Russian American who'd been with him on the night of the Manhattan bar fight, turned "snitch" and helped the Department of Justice prosecute their co-conspirators.²² Reportedly, so did Salvatore Lauria, another "trader" involved in the scheme. According to the Jody Kriss lawsuit, Lauria later joined Bayrock as an off-the-books paid "consultant." Initially their cooperation, which lasted from 1998 until at least late 2001, was kept secret, until it was inadvertently revealed in a March 2000 press release by U.S. Attorney Lynch.

Unfortunately for Sater, at about the same time the NYPD also reportedly discovered that he had been running a money-laundering scheme and illicit gun sales out of a Manhattan storage locker. He and Klotsman fled to Russia. However, according to the New York Times, which cited Klotsman and Lauria, soon after the events of September 11, 2001, the ever-creative Sater succeeded in brokering information about the black market for Stinger anti-aircraft missiles to the CIA and the FBI. According to Klotsman, this strategy "bought Felix his freedom," allowing him to return to Brooklyn. It is still not clear precisely what information Sater actually provided, but in 2015 U.S. Attorney General Loretta Lynch publicly commended him for sharing information that she described as "crucial to national security."

Meanwhile, Sater's sentence for his financial crimes continued to be deferred even after his official cooperation ceased in late 2001. His files remained sealed, and he managed to avoid any sentencing for those crimes at all until October 23, 2009. When he finally appeared before the Eastern District's Judge I. Leo Glasser, Felix received a $25,000 fine, no jail time, and no probation in a quiet proceeding that attracted no press attention. Some compared this sentence to Judge Glasser's earlier sentence of Mafia hit man "Sammy the Bull" Gravano to 4.5 years for 19 murders, in exchange for "cooperating against John Gotti."

In any case, between 2002 and 2008, when Felix Sater finally left Bayrock LLC, and well beyond, his ability to avoid jail and conceal his criminal roots enabled him to enjoy a lucrative new career as Bayrock's chief operating officer. In that position, he was in charge of negotiating aggressive property deals all over the planet, even while—according to lawsuits by former Bayrock investors—engaging in still more financial fraud. The only apparent difference was that he changed his name from "Sater" to "Satter."²³

In the 2013 deposition cited earlier, Trump went on to say, "I don't see Felix as being a member of the Mafia." Asked if he had any evidence for this claim, Trump conceded, "I have none."²⁴

As for Sater's pal Klotsman, the past few years have not been kind. As of December 2016 he was in a Russian penal colony, working off a ten-year sentence for a failed $2.8 million Moscow diamond heist in August 2010. In 2016

Klotsman was reportedly placed on a “top-ten list” of Americans that the Russians were willing to exchange for high-value Russian prisoners in U.S. custody, like the infamous arms dealer Viktor Bout. So far there have been no takers. But with Donald Trump as President, who knows?

THE CASE OF ICELAND’S FL GROUP

One of the most serious frauds alleged in the recent Bayrock lawsuit involves FL Group. FL Group is an Icelandic private investment fund that is really a saga all on its own.

Iceland is not usually thought of as a major offshore financial center. It is a small snowy island in the North Atlantic, closer to Greenland than to the United Kingdom or Europe, with only 330,000 citizens and a total GDP of just $17 billion. Twenty years ago, its main exports were cod and aluminum—with the imported bauxite smelted there to take advantage of the island’s low electricity costs.

But in the 1990s Iceland’s tiny neoliberal political elite had what they all told themselves was a brilliant idea: “Let’s privatize our state-owned banks, deregulate capital markets, and turn them loose on the world!” By the time all three of the resulting privatized banks, as well as FL Group, failed in 2008, the combined bank loan portfolio amounted to more than 12.5 times Iceland’s GDP—the highest country-debt ratio in the world.

For purposes of our story, the most interesting thing about Iceland is that, long before the financial crisis hit and utterly bankrupted FL Group, our two key Russian/FSU/Brooklyn mobster-mavens, Arif and Sater, had somehow stumbled on this obscure Iceland fund. Indeed, in early 2007 they persuaded FL Group to invest $50 million in a project to build the Trump SoHo in mid-town Manhattan.

According to the Kriss lawsuit, at the same time FL Group and Bayrock’s Felix Sater also agreed in principle to pursue up to an additional $2 billion in other Trump-related deals. The Kriss lawsuit further alleges that FL Group (FLG) also agreed to work with Bayrock to facilitate outright tax fraud on more than $250 million of potential earnings. In particular, it alleges that FLG agreed to provide $50 million in exchange for a 62 percent stake in the four Bayrock Trump projects, but Bayrock would structure the contract as a “loan.” This meant that Bayrock would not have to pay taxes on the initial proceeds, while FLG’s anticipated $250 million of dividends would be channeled through a Delaware company and characterized as “interest payments,” allowing Bayrock to avoid up to $100 million in taxes. For tax purposes, Bayrock would pretend that their actual partner was a Delaware partnership that it had formed with FLG, “FLG Property I LLC,” rather than FLG itself.

The Trump Organization has denied any involvement with FLG. However, as an equity partner in the Trump SoHo, with a significant 18 percent equity stake in this one deal alone, Donald Trump himself had to sign off on the Bayrock-FLG deal.

This raises many questions. Most of these will have to await the outcome of the Kriss litigation, which might take years, especially now that Trump is President. But several of these questions just leap off the page.

For example, how much did President Trump know about the partners and the inner workings of this deal? After all, he had a significant equity stake in it, unlike many of his “brand-name only” deals, and it was also supposed to finance several of his most important East Coast properties.

For another, how did the FL Group and Bayrock come together to do this dodgy deal in the first place? One former FL Group manager alleges that the deal arrived by accident, a “relatively small deal” that was nothing special on either side.²⁵ The Kriss lawsuit, on the other hand, alleges that FLG was a well-known source of easy money from sources like Kazakhstan and Russia, and that other Bayrock players with criminal histories—like Salvatore Lauria, for example—were involved in making the introductions.

At this stage the evidence with respect to this second question is incomplete. But there are already some interesting indications that FL Group’s willingness to generously finance Bayrock’s peculiar Russian/FSU/Brooklyn team, its rather poorly conceived Trump projects, and its purported tax dodging were not simply due to Icelandic backwardness. There is much more for us to know about Iceland’s “special” relationship with Russian finance. In this regard, there are seven puzzles to be resolved.

First, FL Group, Iceland's largest private investment fund until it crashed in 2008, had several owners/investors with deep Russian business connections, including several key investors in all three top Iceland banks.

Second, FL Group had constructed an incredible maze of cross-shareholding, lending, and cross-derivatives relationships with all these major banks.²⁶ This thicket of cross-dealing made it almost impossible to regulate "control fraud," where insiders at leading financial institutions went on a self-serving binge, borrowing and lending to finance risky investments of all kinds. It became difficult to determine which institutions were net borrowers or investors, as the concentration of ownership and self-dealing in the financial system soared.

Third, FL Group made a variety of peculiar loans to Russian-connected oligarchs as well as to Bayrock. For example, as discussed below, Alex Shnaider, the Russian-Canadian billionaire who later became Donald Trump's Toronto business partner, secured a €45.8 million loan to buy a yacht from Kaupthing Bank during the same period, while a company belonging to another Russian billionaire who reportedly owns an important vodka franchise got an even larger loan.²⁷

Fourth, Iceland's largest banks also made a series of extraordinary loans to Russian interests during the run-up to the 2008 crisis. For example, one of Russia's wealthiest oligarchs, a close friend of President Putin, nearly managed to secure at least €400 million (some say up to four times that much) from Kaupthing, Iceland's largest bank, in late September 2008, just as the financial crisis was breaking wide open. This bank also had important direct and indirect investments in FL Group. Indeed, until December 2006, it is reported to have employed the FL Group private equity manager who allegedly negotiated Felix Sater's $50 million deal in early 2007.²⁸

Fifth, there are unconfirmed accounts of a secret U.S. Federal Reserve report that unnamed Iceland banks were being used for Russian money laundering.²⁹ Furthermore, Kaupthing Bank's repeated requests to open a

New York branch in 2007-08 were rejected by the Fed. Similar unconfirmed rumors repeatedly appeared in Danish and German publications, and there were allegations in the Kriss lawsuit about the supposed Kazakh origins of FLG's cash to be "laundered."

Sixth, there is the peculiar fact that, when Iceland's banks went belly-up in October 2008, their private banking subsidiaries in Luxembourg, which were managing at least €8 billion of private assets, were suddenly seized by Luxembourg banking authorities and transferred to a new bank, Banque Havilland. This happened so fast that Iceland's Central Bank was prevented from learning anything about the identities or portfolio sizes of the Iceland banks' private offshore clients. But again, there were rumors of some important Russian names.

Finally, there is the rather odd phone call that Russia's Ambassador to Iceland made to Iceland's Prime Minister at 6:45 a.m. on October 7, 2008, the day after the financial crisis hit Iceland. According to the PM's own account, the Russian Ambassador informed him that then-Prime Minister Putin was willing to consider offering Iceland a €4 billion Russian bailout.

This alleged Putin offer was modified not long thereafter into a willingness to entertain an Icelandic negotiating team in Moscow. By the time the team got to Moscow later that year, Russia's desire to lend had cooled, and Iceland ended up accepting a $2.1 billion IMF "stabilization package" instead. According to a member of the negotiating team, the reasons for the reversal are still a mystery. Perhaps Putin had simply decided that Russia had to worry about its own considerable financial problems. Or perhaps he had discovered that Iceland's banks had indeed been very generous to Russian interests on the lending side, while—given Luxembourg's actions—any Russian private wealth invested in Icelandic banks was already safe.

On the other hand, there may be a simpler explanation for Iceland's peculiar generosity to sketchy partners like Bayrock. After all, right up to the last minute before the October 2008 meltdown, the whole world had awarded Iceland AAA ratings: Depositors queued up in London to open high-yield Iceland bank accounts, its bank stocks were booming, and the compensation paid to its financiers was off the charts. So why would anyone worry about making a few more dubious deals?

Overall, therefore, with respect to these odd “Russia-Iceland” connections, the proverbial jury is still out. But all these Icelandic puzzles are intriguing and bear further investigation.

THE CASE OF THE TRUMP TORONTO TOWER AND HOTEL—ALEX SHNAIDER

Our fourth case study of Trump’s business associates concerns the 48-year-old Russian-Canadian billionaire Alex Shnaider, who co-financed the seventy-story Trump Tower and Hotel, Canada’s tallest building. It opened in Toronto in 2012. Unfortunately, like so many of Trump’s other Russia/FSU-financed projects before it, this massive Toronto condo-hotel project went belly-up this November and has now entered foreclosure.

According to an online profile of Shnaider by a Ukrainian news agency, Alex Shnaider was born in Leningrad in 1968, the son of “Евсей Шнайдер,” or “Evsei Shnaider” in Russian.³⁰ A 2005 Forbes article says that he and his family emigrated to Israel from Russia when he was four and then relocated to Toronto when he was 13 or 14. The Ukrainian news agency says that Alex’s family soon established “one of the most successful stories in Toronto’s Russian quarter, “ and that young Alex, with “an entrepreneurial streak,” “helped his father Evsei Shnaider in the business, placing goods on the shelves and wiping floors.”

The younger Shnaider prospered in the New World. Much of this was no doubt due to raw talent. But it also appears that for a time he got a significant helping hand from his (now reportedly ex-) father-in-law, another colorful Russian-Canadian, Boris J. Birshtein.

Originally from Lithuania, Birshtein, now about 69, has been a Canadian citizen since at least 1982.³¹ He resided in Zurich for a time in the early 1990s, but then returned to Toronto and New York.³² One of his key companies was called Seabeco SA, a “trading” company that was registered in Zurich in December 1982.³³ By the early 1990s Birshtein and his partners had started many other Seabeco-related companies in a wide variety of locations, including Antwerp,³⁴ Toronto,³⁵ Winnipeg,³⁶ Moscow, Delaware,³⁷ Panama,³⁸ and Zurich.³⁹ Several of these are still active.⁴⁰ He often staffed them with directors and officers from a far-flung network of Russians, emissaries from other FSU countries like Kyrgyzstan and Moldova, and recent Russia/FSU émigrés to Canada.⁴¹

According to the Financial Times and the FBI, in addition to running Seabeco, Birshtein was a close business associate of Sergei Mikhaylov, the reputed head of Solntsevskaya Bratva, the Russian mob’s largest branch and the world’s highest-grossing organized crime group as of 2014, according to Fortune.⁴² A 1996 FBI intelligence report cited by the FT claims that Birshtein hosted a meeting in his Tel Aviv office for Mikhaylov, the Ukrainian-born Semion Mogilevich, and several other leaders of the Russo/FSU mafia, in order to discuss “sharing interests in Ukraine.”⁴³ A subsequent 1998 FBI Intelligence report on the “Semion Mogilevich Organization” repeated the same charge, and described Mogilevich’s successful attempts at gaining control over Ukrainian privatization assets.⁴⁴ The FT article also described how Birshtein and his associates had acquired extraordinary influence with key Ukraine officials, including President Leonid Kuchma, with the help of up to $5 million in payoffs.⁴⁵ Citing Swiss and Belgian investigators, the FT also claimed that Birshtein and Mikhaylov jointly controlled a Belgian company called MAB International in the early 1990s.⁴⁶ During that period, those same investigators reportedly observed transfers worth millions of dollars between accounts held by Mikhaylov, Birshtein, and Alexander Volkov, Seabeco’s representative in Ukraine.

In 1993, the Yeltsin government reportedly accused Birshtein of illegally exporting seven million tons of Russian oil and laundering the proceeds.⁴⁷ Dmytro Iakoubovski, a former associate of Birshtein’s who had also moved to Toronto, was said to be cooperating with the Russian investigation. One night a gunman fired three shots into Iakoubovski’s home, leaving a note warning him to cease his cooperation, according to a New York Times article published that year. As noted above, according to the Belgian newspaper Le Soir, two members of Bayrock's Eurasian Trio were also involved in Seabeco during this period as well—Patokh Chodiev and Alexander Mashkevich. Chodiev reportedly first met Birshtein through the Soviet Foreign Ministry, and then went on to run Seabeco's Moscow office before joining its Belgium office in 1991. Le Soir further claims that Mashkevich worked for Seabeco, too, and that this was how he and Chodiev had first met.

All this is fascinating, but what about the connections between Birshtein and Trump's Toronto business associate, Alex Shnaider? Again, the leads we have are tantalizing. The Toronto Globe and Mail reported in 2005 that in 1991, while enrolled in law school, young Alex Shnaider started working for Birshtein at Seabeco's Zurich headquarters, where he was reportedly introduced to steel trading. Evidently this was much more than just a job; the Zurich company registry lists "Alex Shnaider" as a director of "Seabeco Metals AG" from March 1993 to January 1994.⁴⁸

According to this account, he reportedly left Seabeco in January 1994 to start his own trading company in Antwerp, in partnership with a Belgian trader-partner. Curiously, Le Soir also reported in 1997 that Mikhaylov and Birshtein co-founded MAB International in Antwerp in January 1994. Is it far-fetched to suspect that Alex Shnaider and mob boss Mikhaylov might have crossed paths, since they were both in the same city and they were both close to Shnaider's father-in-law?

According to Forbes, soon after Shnaider moved to Antwerp, he started visiting the factories of his steel-trading partners in Ukraine.⁴⁹ His favorite client was the Zaporizhstal steel mill, Ukraine's fourth-largest. At the Zaporizhstal mill he reportedly met Eduard Shifrin (a.k.a. Shyfrin), a metals trader with a doctorate in metallurgical engineering. Together they founded Midland Resource Holdings Ltd. in 1994.⁵⁰

As the Forbes piece argues, with privatization sweeping Eastern Europe, private investors were jockeying to buy up the government's shares in Zaporizhstal. But most traders lacked the financial backing and political connections to accumulate large, risky positions. Shnaider and Shifrin, in contrast, started buying up shares without limit, as if their pockets and connections were very deep. By 2001 they had purchased 93 percent of the plant for about $70 million, a stake worth much more just five years later, when Shnaider reportedly turned down a $1.2 billion offer.

Today, Midland Resources Holdings Ltd. reportedly generates more than $4 billion a year of revenue and has numerous subsidiaries across Eastern Europe.⁵¹ Shnaider also reportedly owns Talon International Development, the firm that oversaw construction of the Trump hotel tower in Toronto. All this wealth apparently helped Iceland's FL Group decide that it could afford to extend a €45.8 million loan to Alex Shnaider in 2008 to buy a yacht.⁵²

As of December 2016, a search of the Panama Papers database found no fewer than 28 offshore companies that have been associated with "Midland Resources Holding Limited."⁵³ According to the database, "Midland Resources Holding Limited" was a shareholder in at least two of these companies, alongside an individual named "Oleg Sheykhametov."⁵⁴ The two companies, Olave Equities Limited and Colley International Marketing SA, were both registered and active in the British Virgin Islands from 2007–10.⁵⁵ A Russian restaurateur by that same name reportedly runs a business owned by two other alleged Solntsevskaya mob associates, Lev Kvetnoy and Andrei Skoch, both of whom appear with Sergei Mikhaylov. Of course, mere inclusion in such a group photo is not evidence of wrongdoing.⁵⁶ According to Forbes, Kvetnoy is the 55th richest person in Russia and Skoch, now a deputy in the Russian Duma, is the 18th.⁵⁷

Finally, it is also intriguing to note that Boris Birshtein is also listed as the President of "ME Moldova Enterprises AG," a Zurich-based company founded in November 1992, transferred to the canton of Schwyz in September 1994, and liquidated and cancelled in January 1999.⁵⁸ Birshtein was a member of the company's board of directors from November 1992 to January 1994, when he became its president. At that point he was succeeded as president in June 1994 by one "Evsei Shnaider, Canadian citizen, resident in Zurich," who was also listed as director of the company in September 1994.⁵⁹ "Evsei Shnaider" is also listed in the Panama registry as a treasurer and director of

“The Seabeco Group Inc.,” formed on December 6, 1991,⁶⁰ and as treasurer and director of Seabeco Security International Inc.,” formed on December 10, 1991. As of December 2016, both companies are still in existence.⁶¹ Boris Birshtein is listed as president and director of both companies.⁶²

THE CASE OF PAUL MANAFORT’S UKRAINIAN OLIGARCHS

Our fifth Trump associate profile concerns the Russo/Ukrainian connections of Paul Manafort, the former Washington lobbyist who served as Donald Trump’s national campaign director from April to August of 2016. Manafort’s partner, Rick Davis, also served as national campaign manager for Senator John McCain in 2008, so this may not be just a Trump association.

One of Manafort’s biggest clients was the dubious pro-Russian Ukrainian billionaire Dmytro Firtash. By his own admission, Firtash maintains strong ties with a recurring figure on this scene, the reputed Ukrainian/Russian mob boss Semion Mogilevich. His most important other link is almost certainly to Putin. Otherwise it is difficult to explain how this former used-car salesman could gain a lock on trading goods for gas in Turkmenistan and also become a lynchpin investor in the Swiss company RosUrEnerg, which controls Gazprom’s gas sales to Europe.⁶³

In 2008, Manafort teamed up with a former manager of the Trump Organization to purchase the Drake Hotel in New York for up to $850 million, with Firtash agreeing to invest $112 million. According to a lawsuit brought against Manafort and Firtash, the point of the deal was not to make a carefully planned investment in real estate, but simply to launder part of the huge profits that Firtash had skimmed while brokering natural gas deals between Russia and Ukraine, with Mogilevich acting as a “silent partner.”

Ultimately, Firtash pulled out of the Drake Hotel deal. The reasons are unclear—it has been suggested that he needed to focus on the 2015 collapse and nationalization of his Group DF’s Bank Nadra back home in Ukraine.⁶⁴ But it doesn’t appear to have changed his behavior.

Since 2014 there has been a spate of other Firtash-related prosecutions, with the United States trying to extradite him from Austria in order to try him on allegations that his vast spider net “Group DF” had bribed Indian officials to secure mining licenses. The Austrian court has required him to put up a record-busting €125 million bail while he awaits a decision.⁶⁵ And just this past November, Spain also tried to extradite Firtash on a separate money-laundering case involving the laundering of €10 million through Spanish property investments.

After Firtash pulled out of the deal, Manafort reportedly turned to Trump, but he declined to engage. Manafort stepped down as Trump’s campaign manager in August of 2016, in response to press investigations into his ties not only to Firtash, but to Ukraine’s previous, pro-Russian Yanukovich government, which had been deposed by an uprising in 2014. However, following the November 8 election, Manafort reportedly returned, joining his business associate Roger Stone in advising Trump on staffing his new Administration. He got an assist from Putin—on November 30 a spokeswoman for the Russian Foreign Ministry accused Ukraine of leaking stories about Manafort in an effort to hurt Trump.

THE CASE OF “WELL-CONNECTED” RUSSIA/FSU MOBSTERS

Finally, several other interesting Russian/FSU connections have a more residential flavor, but they are a source of important leads about the Trump network. Indeed, partly because it has no prying co-op board, Trump Tower in New York has received little press attention for including among its many honest residents tax-dodgers, bribers, arms dealers, convicted cocaine traffickers, and corrupt former FIFA officials.⁶⁶

One typical example involves the alleged Russian mobster Anatoly Golubchik, who went to prison in 2014 for running an illegal gambling ring out of Trump Tower—not only the headquarters of the Trump Organization but also the former headquarters of Bayrock Group LLC. This operation reportedly took up the entire 51st floor. Also reportedly involved in it was the alleged mobster Alimzhan Tokhtakhounov,⁶⁷ who has the distinction of making the Forbes 2008 list of the World's Ten Most Wanted Criminals, and whose organization the FBI believes to be tied to Mogilevich's. Even as this gambling ring was still operating in Trump Tower, Tokhtakhounov reportedly traveled to Moscow to attend Donald Trump's 2013 Miss Universe contest as a special VIP.

In the Panama Papers database we do find the name "Anatoly Golubchik." Interestingly, his particular offshore company, "Lytton Ventures Inc.," shares a corporate director, Stanley Williams, with a company that may well be connected to Semion Mogilevich, the Russian mafia's alleged "Boss of Bosses" who has appeared so frequently in the story above.⁶⁸ Thus Lytton Ventures Inc. shares this particular director with another company that is held under the name of "Galina Telesh."⁶⁹ According to the Organized Crime and Corruption Reporting Project, multiple offshore companies belonging to Semion Mogilevich have been registered under this same name—which just happens to be that of Mogilevich's first wife.

A 2003 indictment of Mogilevich also mentions two offshore companies he is said to have owned, with names that include the terms "Arbat" and "Arigon." The same corporate director shared by Golubchik and Telesh also happens to be a director of a company called Westix Ltd.,⁷⁰ which shares its Moscow address with "Arigon Overseas" and "Arbat Capital."⁷¹ And another company with that same director appears to belong to Dariga Nazarbayeva, the eldest daughter of Nursultan Nazarbayev, the long-lived President of Kazakhstan. Dariga is expected to take his place if he ever decides to leave office or proves to be mortal.

Lastly, Dmytro Firtash—the Mogilevich pal and Manafort client we met earlier—also turns up in the Panama Papers database as part of Galina Telesh's network neighborhood. A director of Telesh's "Barlow Investing," Vasliki Andreou, was also a nominee director of a Cyprus company called "Toromont Ltd.," while another Toromont Ltd. nominee director, Annex Holdings Ltd., a St. Kitts company, is also listed as a shareholder in Firtash's Group DF Ltd., along with Firtash himself.⁷² And Group DF's CEO, who allegedly worked with Manafort to channel Firtash's funding into the Drake Hotel venture, is also listed in the Panama Papers database as a Group DF shareholder. Moreover, a 2006 Financial Times investigation identified three other offshore companies that are linked to both Firtash and Telesh.⁷³

Of course, all of these curious relationships may just be meaningless coincidences. After all, the director shared by Telesh and Golubchik is also listed in the same role for more than 200 other companies, and more than one thousand companies besides Arbat Capital and Arigon Overseas share Westix's corporate address. In the burgeoning land of offshore havens and shell-game corporate citizenship, there is no such thing as overcrowding. The appropriate way to view all this evidence is to regard it as "Socratic": raising important unanswered questions, not providing definite answers.

In any case, returning to Trump's relationships through Trump Tower, another odd one involves the 1990s-vintage fraudulent company YBM Magnex International. YBM, ostensibly a world-class manufacturer of industrial magnets, was founded indirectly in Newtown, Bucks County, Pennsylvania in 1995 by the "boss of bosses," Semion Mogilevich, Moscow's "brainy Don."

This is a fellow with a remarkable history, even if only half of what has been written about him is true.⁷⁴ Unfortunately, we need focus here only on the bits that are most relevant. Born in Kiev, and now a citizen of Israel as well as Ukraine and Russia, Semion, now seventy, is a lifelong criminal. But he boasts an undergraduate economics degree from Lviv University, and is reported to take special pride in designing sophisticated, virtually undetectable financial frauds that take years to put in place. To pull them off, he often relies on the human frailties of top bankers, stockbrokers, accountants, business magnates, and key politicians.⁷⁵

In YBM's case, using a mere $2.4 million in bribes, Semion and his henchmen spent years in the 1990s launching a product-free, fictitious company on the still-badly under-regulated Toronto Stock Exchange. Along the way they secured the support of several leading Toronto business people, and a former Ontario Province

Premier won a seat on YBM's board. They also paid the "Big Four" accounting firm Deloitte Touche very handsomely in exchange for glowing audits. By mid-1998, YBM's stock price had gone from less than $0.10 to $20, and Semion cashed out at least $18 million—a relatively big fraud for its day—before the FBI raided YBM's corporate headquarters. When it did so, it found piles of bogus invoices for magnets, but no magnets.⁷⁶

In 2003, Mogilevich was indicted in Philadelphia on 45 felony counts for this $150 million stock fraud. But there is no extradition treaty between the United States and Russia, and no chance that Russia will ever extradite Semion voluntarily; he is arguably a national treasure, especially now. Acknowledging these realities, or perhaps for other reasons, the FBI quietly removed Mogilevich from its Top Ten Most Wanted list in 2015, where he had resided for the previous six years.⁷⁷

For our purposes, one of the most interesting things to note about this YBM Magnex case is that its CEO was a Russian-American named Jacob Bogatin, who was also indicted in the Philadelphia case. His brother David had served in the Soviet Army in a North Vietnamese anti-aircraft unit, helping to shoot down American pilots like Senator John McCain. Since the early 1990s, David Bogatin was considered by the FBI to be one of the key members of Semion Mogilevich's Russian organized crime family in the United States, with a long string of convictions for big-ticket Mogilevich-type offenses like financial fraud and tax dodging.

At one point, David Bogatin owned five separate condos in Trump Tower that Donald Trump had reportedly sold to him personally.⁷⁸ And Vyacheslav Ivankov, another key Mogilevich lieutenant in the United States during the 1990s, also resided for a time at Trump Tower, and reportedly had in his personal phone book the private telephone and fax numbers for the Trump Organization's office in that building.⁷⁹

So what have we learned from this deep dive into the network of Donald Trump's Russian/FSU connections? Four main points stand forth.

First, the President really is very "well-connected," with an extensive network of global underground connections unprecedented in White House history. In choosing his associates, evidently Donald Trump only pays cursory attention to questions of background, character, and integrity.

Second, Donald Trump has literally spent decades cultivating relationships of all kinds with Russia and the FSU. And senior public and private Russian figures of all kinds have likewise spent decades cultivating him, not only as a business partner, but possibly as a "useful idiot." After all, on September 1, 1987, Trump was already willing to spend $94,801 on full-page ads in the Boston Globe, the Washington Post, and the New York Times calling for the United States to stop spending money to defend Japan, Europe, and the Persian Gulf, "an area of only marginal significance to the U.S. for its oil supplies, but one upon which Japan and others are almost totally dependent."⁸⁰ This is one key reason why Robert Gates—a registered Republican who served as Secretary of Defense under Presidents Bush and Obama, as well as former Director and Deputy Director of the CIA—criticized the response of Congress and the White House to the alleged Putin-backed hacking as far too "laid back."⁸¹

Third, even beyond questions of possible illegality, the public clearly has a right to know much more than it already does about the nature of such global connections. As the opening quote from Cervantes suggests, these relationships are probably a pretty good leading indicator of how the President will behave in office.

Unfortunately, for many reasons, this year American voters never really got the chance to decide whether such low connections and entanglements belong at the world's high peak of official power. It is now too late to establish the kind of bipartisan, 9/11-type commission that would be needed to explore these connections in detail.

Finally, the long-term consequence of careless, or careful but misguided, interventions into other countries' politics is that they often come back to haunt us. In Russia's case, perhaps, after a 25-year arc, it just has. 🌐

End Notes

- ¹Author's estimates; see globalhavenindustry.com for more details.
- ²For an overview and critical discussion, see Peter Rutland, "Mission Impossible? The IMF and the Failure of the Market Transition in Russia" Review of International Studies (Fall 1999), pp. 183-200.
- ³See Lawrence Klein and Marshall Pomer, Russia's Economic Transition Gone Awry (Stanford University Press, 2002); see also James S. Henry and Marshall Pomer, "A Pile of Ruble," New Republic, September 7, 1998.
- ⁴See Michelle Lee, "Fact Check: Has Trump Declared Bankruptcy Four or Six Times?" Washington Post, September 26, 2016. This report counts six bankruptcies of the Trump Organization, but excludes failed projects like the Trump SoHo, the Toronto condo-hotel, the Fort Lauderdale condo-hotel, and many others in which Trump was a minority investor or had simply licensed his brand.
- ⁵For example, the Swiss federal and cantonal corporate registries, available at <http://zefix.admin.ch/>.
- ⁶See "Offshore Leaks Database," the International Consortium of Investigative Journalists (ICIJ). The database draws on the "Panama Papers," and was created in April 2016.
- ⁷Trump's minority equity deal with Bayrock was unlike many others, where he simply licensed his name. See Michael Idev, "Trump Soho Is Not an Oxymoron," New York Magazine, March 30, 2008.
- ⁸"I dealt mostly with Tefvik," he said in 2007. Wayne Barrett, "Inside Donald Trump's Empire: Why He Didn't Run for President in 2012," Daily Beast, May 5, 2011.
- ⁹Trilogy Properties LLC vs. SB Hotel Associates LLC, Case No. 1:09-cv-21406-KMW, Document 408, United States District Court Southern District of Florida (November 26, 2013), p. 15.
- ¹⁰"Tefvik Arif," Kazakh Business Bulletin.
- ¹¹Bayrock reported its co-ownership of six Rixos hotels in a 2007 press release. Bayrock Group LLC, "Bayrock Group Increases Stake in Midtown Miami Mixed-Use Development," PR Newswire, July 27, 2007.
- ¹²See also Elnur Salihovic, Major Players in the Muslim Business World (Universal-Publishers, 2015), p.107; and Rowena Mason, "U.S. Ambassador Unimpressed by Food at Oligarch Alexander Mashkevich's House," Telegraph, December 1, 2010.
- ¹³See also Alastair Fraser & Miles Larmer, Zambia, Mining, and Neo-Liberalism (Palgrave Macmillan, 2010); Jason Bennett, "The Belgian Billionaire George Arthur Forrest, Who Was Named in the 'Kazakhgate' Affair by the French Site Mediapart on Monday, Denies Any Involvement," Brussels Times, June 17, 2015; and Alain Lallemand, Philippe Regnier, and Beatrice Delvaux, "Le parquet de Bruxelles enquête 'Kazakhgate': Tractebel confirme, sans commentaire," Le Soir, December 28, 1999.
- ¹⁴According to the Panama Papers database, "International Financial Limited" was registered on April 3, 1998, but is no longer active today, although no precise deregistration date is available. See "International Financial Limited," Offshore Leaks Database, ICIJ.
- ¹⁵According to the Panama Papers, "Group Rixos Hotel" is still an active company, while three of the four companies it served were struck off in 2007 and the fourth, Hazara Asset Management, in 2013.
- ¹⁶Yana Pevzner & Thiya Barak, "A Billionaire in Stormy Waters," Yediot Aharonot, March 29, 2011.
- ¹⁷See also Yazıcı Dostu Gösterim, "Savarona zanlıları sorgulanırken, İsmailov adliyeye gitti," TurizmGüncel.com, October 2, 2010; and Jerome Bastion, "Machkévitich et ses complices blanchis par la justice turque," Le Grand Soir, May 26, 2011.
- ¹⁸Trilogy Properties LLC vs. SB Hotel Associates LLC, Document 408, p. 16.
- ¹⁹The exact date that Sater joined Bayrock is unclear. A New York Times article says 2003, but this appears to be too late. See Charles V. Bagli, "Real Estate Executive With Hand in Trump Projects Rose From Tangled Past," New York Times, December 17, 2007. Sater says 1999, but this is too early. A certified petition filed with the U.S. Supreme Court places the time around 2002, which is more consistent with Sater's other activities during this period, including his cooperation with the Department of Justice on the Coppa case in 1998–2001, and his foreign travel.

²⁰See Gary Silverman, "U.S. Election: Trump's Russian Riddle," Financial Times, August 14, 2016; Mike McIntire, "Donald Trump Settled a Real Estate Lawsuit, and a Criminal Case Was Closed," New York Times, April 5, 2016; and Rosalind S. Helderman & Tom Hamburger, "Former Mafia-linked Figure Describes Association with Trump," Washington Post, May 17, 2016. Note that previous accounts of Sater's activities have overlooked the role that this very permissive relationship with Federal law enforcement, especially the FBI, may have played in encouraging Sater's subsequent risk-taking and financial crimes. See Lorienton N.A. Palmer et al. v. John Doe 98-CR-01101 et al., Case No. 13-2373-cv, U.S. Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit (June 5, 2014), cert. denied, Supreme Court of the United States (January 12, 2015). Accessed at National Review Online.

²¹See Palmer v. Doe, p. 13.

²²Sater's 1998 case, never formally sealed, was U.S. v. Sater, 98-CR-1101, United States District Court Eastern District of New York. The case in which Sater secretly informed was U.S. v. Coppa, 00-CR-196, United States District Court Eastern District of New York. See also Michael Weiss, Catherine A. Fitzpatrick, and James Miller, "Trump's Russia Towers: He Just Can't Get Them Up," Daily Beast, November 6, 2016.

²³See Charles V. Bagli, "Real Estate Executive with Hand in Trump Projects Rose from Tangled Past." Sater also may have taken other steps to conceal his criminal past. According to the 2015 lawsuit filed by ex-Bayrocker Jody Kriss, Arif agreed to pay Sater his $1 million salary under the table, allowing Sater to pretend that he lacked resources to compensate any victims of his prior financial frauds. See the complaint of Kriss et al. v. Bayrock et al., No. 10 Civ. 3959 (LGS) (FM), United States District Court Southern District of New York, pp. 2, 18. The lawsuit also alleges that Sater may have held a majority of Bayrock's ownership, but that Arif, Sater, and other Bayrock officers may have conspired to hide this by listing

Arif as the sole owner on offering documents.

²⁴See Palmer v. Doe, p. 155.

²⁵See Sigrún Davíðsdóttir's Icelog, the blog of Icelandic journalist Sigrún Davíðsdóttir.

²⁶See "Report of the Special Investigation Commission on the 2008 Financial Crisis" Rannsóknarnefndir Alþingi, April 12, 2010.

²⁷These loans are disclosed in "Corporate Credit—Disclosure of Large Exposures > €40 mm" Kaupthing Bank, September 25, 2008. This document was disclosed by Wikileaks in 2009. On p. 145, the report lists a €79.5 million yacht-construction loan to Russian vodka magnate Yuri Shefler's Serena Equity Ltd.; on p. 208, it mentions a €45.8 million yacht-construction loan to Canadian-Russian billionaire Alex Shnaider's Filbert Pacific Ltd. See also Rowena Mason, "Kaupthing Leak Exposes Loans," Telegraph, August 4, 2009.

²⁸See Kriss v. Bayrock; author's analysis of Kaupthing/FLG employees' published career histories.

²⁹Author's interview, Reykjavik, July 2016.

³⁰"Dossier on Alex Schneider—co-owner of "Zaporizhstal," Uniad. The passage in Russian, with the father's name underlined, is as follows: "Родители Алекса Шнайдера владели одним из первых успешных русских магазинов в русском квартале Торонто. Алекс помогал в бизнесе отцу—Евсею Шнайдеру, расставляя на полках товар и протирая полы. С юных лет в Алексее зрела предпринимательская жилка. Живя с родителями, он стал занимать деньги у их друзей и торговать тканями и электроникой с разваливающимися в конце 80-х годов советскими предприятиями." "Евсею Шнайдеру" is the dative case of "Евсей Шнайдер," or "Evsei Shnaider," the father's name in Russian.

³¹The Zurich company registry reports that "Seabeco SA" (CHE-104.863.207) was initially registered on December 16, 1982, with "Boris Joseph Birshtein, Canadian citizen, resident in Toronto" as its President. It entered liquidation on May 5, 1999 in Arth, which was handled by the Swiss trustee Paul Barth. The Zurich company registry listed "Boris Joseph Birshtein, Canadian citizen, resident in Toronto," as the president of Seabeco Kirgizstan AG in 1992, while "Boris Joseph Birshtein, Canadian citizen, resident in Zurich,” was listed as the company’s president in 1993. “Boris Birshtein” is also listed as the president and director of a 1991 Panama company, The Seabeco Group, Inc. as of December 6 1991. See below.

³²Marcel Sel, “Quand Kubla et De Decker tournent kazakh (MàJ)” Un Blog de Sel, February 26, 2015.

³³The Zurich company registry reports that “Seabeco SA” (CHE-104.863.207) was initially registered on December 16, 1982, with “Boris Joseph Birshtein, Canadian citizen, resident in Toronto” as its president. According to the registry, it entered liquidation on May 5, 1999. See also “Seabeco—Agreement Between Boris Birshtein & Sergei Mikhailov—Russian Mafia—Intelligence Newsletter,” March 27, 1997. Posted on the Google Group soc.culture.ukrainian. The liquidation was handled by the Swiss trustee Paul Barth, in Arth.

³⁴For Seabeco’s Antwerp subsidiary, see Alain Lallemand, “Perquisitions en série dans le dossier Mikhaïlov: un lien apparaît entre le mafieux russe et un homme davantage lié au KGB, Boris Birshtein,” Le Soir, March 17, 1997.

³⁵Royal HTM Group, Inc. of Toronto, Canadian Federal Corporation #624476-9, owned 50-50 by Birshtein and his nephew. See “Federal Corporation Information—624476-9,” Government of Canada, January 3, 2017.

³⁶Birshtein was a director of Seabeco Capital Inc. (Canadian Federal Incorporation #248194-4,) a Winnipeg company created June 2, 1989, and dissolved December 22, 1992.

³⁷Since 1998, Boris Birshtein (Toronto) has also served as Chairman, CEO, and a principle shareholder of “Trimol Group Inc.,” a publicly traded Delaware company that trades over the counter. (Symbol: TMOL). Its product line is supposedly “computerized photo identification and database management system utilized in the production of a variety of secure essential government identification documents.” See “TMOL:US,” Bloomberg Markets. However, according to Trimol’s July 2015 10-K (accessed on Wikinvest), the company has only had one customer, the former FSU member Moldova, with which Trimol’s wholly owned subsidiary Intercomsoft concluded a contract in 1996 for the production of a National Passport and Population Registration system. That contract was not renewed in 2006, and the subsidiary and Trimol have had no revenues since then. Accordingly, as of 2016 Trimol has only two part-time employees, its two principal shareholders, Birshtein and his nephew, who, directly and indirectly account for 79 percent of Trimol’s shares outstanding. According to the July 2015 10-K, Birshtein, in particular, owned 54 percent of TMOL’s outstanding 78.3 million shares, including 3.9 million by way of “Magnum Associates, Inc.,” which the 10-K says only has Birshtein as a shareholder, and 34.7 million by way of yet another Canadian company, “Royal HTM Group, Inc.” of Ontario (Canadian Federal Corporation #624476-9), which is also owned 50-50 by Birshtein and a nephew. It is interesting to note that according to the Panama Papers database, a Panama company called “Magnum Associates Inc.” was incorporated on December 10, 1987, and struck off on March 10, 1989. See “Magnum Associates Inc.,” Offshore Leaks Database, ICIJ. As of December 2016, TMOL’s stock price was zero.

³⁸See the case of Trimol Group, Inc. above. The Seabeco Group, Inc., a Panama company that was formed in December 1991, apparently still exists. Boris J. Birshtein is listed as this company’s director and president. “The Seabeco Group Inc.,” was registered in Panama by Morgan y Morgan on December 6, 1991, with “numero de ficha” 254192; see “The Seabeco Group Inc.,” Dan O’Huiginn’s Panama Company Records Database; and “The Seabeco Group, Inc.,” OpenCorporates.

³⁹As of December 2016, the Zurich company registry listed a Zurich company called “Conim Investment AG” (CH-020.3.002.334-7), which was originally formed in May 1992, and in January 1995 was transferred to Arth, in the Canton of Schwyz, where it is still in existence (CHE-102.029.498). This is confirmed by the Schwyz Canton registry. According to these registries, Conim Investment AG is the successor company to two other Zurich companies, “Seabeco Kirgizstan AG,” formed in 1992, and “KD Kirgizstan Development AG,” its direct successor. The Swiss federal company registry also reports the following Swiss companies in which Boris J. Birshtein has been an officer and or a director, all of which are now in liquidation: (1) Seabeco Trade and Finance AG (CH-020.3.002.179-4, April 3, 1992–November 30, 1998) (2) Seabeco SA (CHE-104.863.207, December 16, 1982–May 9, 1999); (3) Seabeco Metals AG (April 3, 1992–June 11, 1996) (4) BNB Trading AG (CH-020.3.002.181-9, January 10, 1992–November 19, 1998); and (5) ME Moldova Enterprises AG (CH-020.3.003.104-1, November 10 1992–September 16, 1994). All of these liquidations were handled by the same trustee, Paul Barth, in Arth.

⁴⁰As of December 2016, active Birshtein companies include “Conim Investment AG” (CH-020.3.002.334-7) in the Swiss Canton of Schwyz and the Seabeco Group, Inc. in Panama.

⁴¹For example, the Zurich and Schwyz company registries indicates that the following have been board members of Birshtein companies: (1) Seabeco Trade and Finance AG: Iouri Orlov (citizen of Russia, resident of Moscow), Alexander Griaznov (citizen of Russia, resident of Basserdorf, Switzerland), and Igor Filippov (citizen of Russia, resident of Basel). (2) ME Moldova Enterprises: Andrei Keptein (citizen of FSU/Moldova; Evsei Shnaider (Russian émigré to Canada); (3) Seabeco Kirgizstan/Conim Investment AG: Sanjarbek Almatov (citizen of Bishkek, FSU/ Kirgizstan), Toursounbek Tchynguychev (citizen of Bishkek, FSU/Kirgizstan), Evsei Shnaider (Russian émigré to Canada); (4) BNB Trading AG: Yuri Spivak (Russian émigré to Canada); (5) Seabeco Metals AG: Alex Shnaider (Russian émigré to Canada).

⁴²Charles Clover, “Ukraine: Questions Over Kuchma’s Adviser Cast Shadows,” Financial Times, October 30, 1999; Chris Matthews, “Fortune 5: The Biggest Organized Crime Groups in the World,” Fortune, September 14, 2014. See also Misha Glenny, McMafia: A Journey Through the Global Criminal Underworld (Vintage Books, 2009), pp. 63–5.

⁴³Charles Clover, “Ukraine: Questions over Kuchma’s adviser cast shadows.”

⁴⁴See “Semion Mogilevich Organization: Eurasian Organized Crime,” FBI Intelligence Section, Organizational Intelligence Unit (August 1998).

⁴⁵Charles Clover, “Ukraine: Questions Over

Kuchma’s Adviser Cast Shadows.”

⁴⁶*Ibid.*

⁴⁷Jack Lakey & Cal Millar, “Boris Knows Everyone,” Toronto Star, August 28, 1993.

⁴⁸See Zurich corporate registry for “Seabeco Metals AG” (CH-020.3.002.181-9), formed April 3, 1992 and liquidated June 11, 1996.

⁴⁹Heidi Brown & Nathan Vardi “Man of Steel,” Forbes, March 28, 2005.

⁵⁰“Company Overview of Midland Resources Holding Ltd.,” Bloomberg, January 13, 2017.

⁵¹*Ibid.*

⁵²See “Loan Book, September 2008,” Kaupthing Bank. Found in “Financial collapse: Confidential Exposure Analysis of 205 Companies Each Owing Above EUR45M to Icelandic Bank Kaupthing, 26 Sep 2008,” Wikileaks, July 30, 2009.

⁵³The ICIJ’s Offshore Leaks Database provides an address for “Midland Resources Holding Limited” that exactly matches the company’s corporate address in Guernsey, as noted by Bloomberg’s corporate database (“Company Overview of Midland Resources Holding Ltd.,” Bloomberg, January 16, 2017). Here are the 28 companies that are associated with Midland in the database: Aligory Business Ltd.; Anglesey Business Ltd.; Blue Industrial Skies Inc.; Cl 850 Aviation Holdings Ltd.; Cl 850 Aircraft Investments Ltd.; Caray Business Inc.; Challenger Aircraft Company Limited; Colley International Marketing S.A.; East International Realty Ltd.; Filbert Pacific Limited; Gorlane Business Inc.; Jabar Incorporated; Jervois Holdings Inc.; Kerryhill Investments Corp.; Leaterby International Investments Corp.; Maddocks Equities Ltd.; Maverfin Holding Inc.; Midland Maritime Holding Ltd.; Midland River-Sea Holding Ltd.; Midland Drybulk Holding Ltd.; Midland Fundco Ltd.; Norson Investments Corp.; Olave Equities Limited; Orlion Business Incorporated; Perseus Global Inc.; Sellana Investments Global Corp.; Stogan Assets Incorporated; and Toomish Asset Ltd.

⁵⁴With the address “11 First Tverskaya-Yamskaya Street, Apt. 42, Moscow, Russia.” See “Colley International Marketing,” “Mr. Oleg Sheykhametov,” and “Olave Equities Limited,” Offshore Leaks Database, ICIJ.

⁵⁵As for the Midland-related offshore vehicles still listed as active, one shareholder in two of them—Stogan Assets Incorporated and Blue Sky Industries Inc.—happens to have the same name as Russia's Deputy Culture Minister Gregory Pirumov, reportedly arrested in March 2016 on embezzlement charges. See Sophia Kishkovsky, "Russian Deputy Culture Minister Detained on Embezzlement Charges" The Art Newspaper, March 15, 2016. The "Gregory Pirumov" in the Panama Papers has a registered address in Moscow (4 Beregovskaya Quay; 121059), as do the reported agents of the two aforementioned companies: "Global Secretary Services Ltd. Mal. Tolmachevskiy pereulok 10 Office No.3 Moscow, Russia 119017)." See "Stogan Assets Incorporated," Panama Offshore Leaks Database. A "Georgy Pirumov" is also listed separately in the Panama Papers as having been a shareholder in the same two companies. See "Stogan Assets Incorporated," Offshore Leaks Database, ICIJ; "Mr. Georgy Pirumov," Offshore Leaks Database, ICIJ. For what it is worth, in September 2016, one "Georgy Pirumov" was convicted in Moscow of "illegally taking over a building in Gogolevsky Boulevard," and sentenced to 20 months in a minimum-security correctional facility. See "In Moscow, Man Found Guilty of Hostile Takeover of Building in Gogolevsky Boulevard," Investigative Committee of the Russian Federation, September 15, 2016. At this point, however, we need to emphasize that there is still plenty that needs to be investigated—we cannot yet confirm whether "Georgy" and "Gregory" are the same person, whether they are related, how they might be related to Shnaider's Mineral Resources, or whether they are the same people named in the articles just noted above about criminal prosecutions.

⁵⁶Simon Goodley, Luke Harding, and Miriam Elder, "Man Behind MegaFon Pictured with Alleged Russian Gangsters," Guardian, November 28, 2012.

⁵⁷"#1476 Lev Kvetnoi" Forbes Real Time Ranking, January 16, 2017.

⁵⁸See "ME Moldova Enterprises AG," Commercial Register of Canton Schwyz. Commercial register number CH-130.0.007.159-5, November 10, 1992–September 16, 1994.

⁵⁹See "ME Moldova Enterprises AG," Commercial Register of the Canton of Zurich. Commercial register number CH-020.3.003.104-1

⁶⁰See "The Seabeco Group Inc.," OpenCorporates. Commercial register number 254192, in the jurisdiction of Panama. Formed December 6, 1991.

⁶¹See "Seabeco Security International Inc.," OpenCorporates. Commercial register number 254206, in the jurisdiction of Panama. Formed December 10, 1991.

⁶²See footnotes 58 and 59.

⁶³Jim Armitage, "Spain Seeks Extradition for Ukrainian Oligarch Linked to Senior Tories for Alleged Money Laundering," Independent, November 25, 2016.

⁶⁴See "Nadra Bank, Owned by Firtash, Declared Insolvent," Unian Information Agency, February 6, 2015.

⁶⁵See footnote 62.

⁶⁶See "First We Take Miami: Why Russian Businessmen and Criminals Move into Trump's Towers," Transparency International Russia, November 10, 2016.

⁶⁷A.k.a. "Tochtachunov." See "Semion Mogilevich Organization: Eurasian Organized Crime."

⁶⁸According to the Panama Papers, as of December 2016, Lytton Ventures Inc., incorporated in 2006, was still an active company but its registration jurisdiction was listed as "unknown." "Lytton Ventures Inc.," Offshore Leaks Database, ICIJ.

⁶⁹For Telesh's company the director's name is given as "Stanley Williams," as compared with "Stanley Edward Williams" in Golubchik's, but they have the same address. See "Barlow Investing Ltd.," Offshore Leaks Database, ICIJ. Telesh's company, Barlow Investing, was incorporated in 2004. In the PP database, as of December 2016 its status was "Transferred Out," although its de-registration date and registration jurisdiction are unknown.

⁷⁰Westix Ltd., registered in 2005, is still active, according to the Panama Papers. See "Westix Ltd.," Offshore Leaks Database, ICIJ.

⁷¹In the Panama Papers, Telesh's company and Golubchik's reportedly have the same director, one Stanley Williams. Williams is also reportedly a director of Westix, which shares its address with two other offshore companies, which use corporate names that Mogilevich has reportedly used at least twice each in the past. See “Semion Mogilevich Dossier,” Russian Mafia Blog. Arbat Capital, registered in 2003, was still active as of December 2016, as was Arigon Overseas, registered in 2007.

⁷²See the diagram below.

⁷³These three offshore companies are not in the Panama Papers database. Firtash acknowledged these connections to Telesh but still told FT reporters that he didn’t know her. See Tom Warner, “Key man in Ukraine gas dispute faces questions,” Financial Times, July 13, 2006. The three companies identified in the report are (1) Highrock Holdings, which Firtash and Telesh each reportedly owned one-third of, and of which Firtash served as director beginning in 2001; (2) Agatheas Holdings, where Firtash apparently replaced Telesh as director in 2003; and (3) Elmstad Trading, a Cyprus company owned by Firtash that in 2002 transferred the shares of a Russian company named Rinvey to Telesh and two other people—one of them Firtash’s lawyer and the other the wife of a reputed Mogilevich business partner. See also Michael Weiss, “Married to the Ukrainian Mob,” Foreign Policy, March 19, 2014.

⁷⁴On Mogilevich, see, for example, “Nationwide Con Artist, Part One,” Russian Mafia Blog, June 27, 2011.

⁷⁵See also ““Semion Mogilevich Organization:

Eurasian Organized Crime.”

⁷⁶Pat Huddleston, “How to spot fraud and be a vigilant investor,” Globe and Mail, October 3, 2011.

⁷⁷See “FBI Ten Most Wanted Fugitives: Semion Mogilevich,” Federal Bureau of Investigations Archives, October 21, 2009; and Justin Peters, “This Obese Mob Boss Is Twice the Villain Whitey Bulger Ever Was,” Slate, August 5, 2013.

⁷⁸David Cay Johnston, interview with the author, November 2016. Wayne Barrett, Trump: The Greatest Show on Earth: The Deals, the Downfall, the Reinvention (Regan Arts, 2016).

⁷⁹Johnston, interview; see also John Tuohy, “The Superpower of Crime,” Russian Mafia Gangster Blog, December 2012. In another interesting coincidence, the President of YBM Magnex was also reportedly a financial director of Highrock in the late 1990s, before Manafort-client Dmytro Firtash joined the company as a director in 2001. See also Michael Weiss, “Married to the Ukrainian Mob.”

⁸⁰John Shanahan, “Trump: U.S. Should Stop Paying to Defend Countries that Can Protect Selves,” Associated Press News Archive, September 1, 1987.

⁸¹Joanna Walters & Martin Pengelly, “Robert Gates Criticises ‘Laid-Back’ US Response to Russia Election Hack,” Guardian, December 18, 2016.

There exists a subterranean world where pathological fantasies disguised as ideas are churned out by crooks and half-educated fanatics for the benefit of the ignorant and superstitious. There are times when this underworld emerges from the depths and suddenly fascinates, captures, and dominates multitudes of usually sane and responsible people, who thereupon take leave of sanity and responsibility. And it occasionally happens that this underworld becomes a political power and changes the course of history.

—Norman Cohn,

Warrant for Genocide: The Myth of the Jewish World-Conspiracy and The Protocols of the Elders of Zion (2006), p. 18